

High School College Courses

High School College Courses - Just be sure the college is accredited, the course is offered at the college level, and the course will be accepted for credit at most other colleges. Also, make sure online courses are open to high school students. To enroll in Ecampus courses, you must first apply to the program. High school students apply as nondegree-seeking students until they are ready to pursue their degree as college students. Check out Oregon State's admission information for further details on applying to the university. Want more details? At Nevada State High School, students take dual-credit classes at local colleges, and those who spend two years with NSHS earn an average of 50 credits by graduation! Using the NSHS Academic Plan, students create their own schedules to get ahead in their college education. Online College Courses for High School Students: Course Overviews. Taking courses online can be an excellent way for high school students to earn college credit or simply gain college-level ...